

RAPID

Who has the “D”?

Effective Decision Making

Sound familiar?

Wasting time in meetings? Making decisions that turn out wrong? Living with a culture where decisions are sabotaged or not executed? If this sounds familiar, your company is not alone. Many organizations don't know how to make and execute good decisions, which leads to dissatisfied customers, poor profitability, and disgruntled employees.

Breaking through decision gridlock

- Research shows a 95 percent correlation between decision effectiveness and financial results.
- Companies effective at decision making generate 6 percent average total shareholder returns higher than other companies.
- Top companies are more than twice as likely to understand which decisions are most important.
- Frontline managers of companies effective at decision making are three times as likely to know what the critical decisions are.
- 85 percent of executives surveyed are dissatisfied with the efficiency and effectiveness of meetings at their company.

Every day, executives make decisions that have the potential to impact both the short- and long-term performance of the organization. This makes understanding the decision landscape, identifying key stakeholders, creating an effective decision process, and making effective decisions one of—if not the most critical—jobs of the executive team.

“Whenever you see a successful business,
someone once made a courageous decision.”

—Peter Drucker
